Did you know that many vaccines require special handling and storage? For instance, a particular vaccine may require protection from extremes of temperature or exposure to light to preserve its effectiveness. Rely on a licensed veterinarian to store and handle the vaccine properly. Veterinarians are keenly aware of the effective life of a given vaccine.

Ask Drs. Brooks or Stanford to develop a customized vaccine program for your horse based on its environmental exposure and other factors. Veterinarian-administered vaccines are always safer, easier and a better value in the long run than doing it yourself.
